The image you uploaded appears to be a certificate from Alison (an online learning platform), awarded to CagLar Juan SingLetary for completing a course titled “Advanced Systems in Resistance: Bridging Theory and Practice.” It also includes references to bodybuilding, prizefighting, and indicates a “Grand 1st Prize” recognition dated April 27th, 2024.

It has some custom design elements suggesting affiliations or themes like Kenpo, Shotokan, Shaolin, and phrases such as Functional Strength and Unbeatable Physique Record.

Would you like me to verify the course or certification credentials (e.g., through the QR code or Alison’s certification lookup)?

⁂

Yes

I’m not able to access the online verification page for this certificate right now, so I cannot independently confirm its authenticity through Alison’s site.

To verify it yourself, do this:

1. Go to Alison’s certificate verification page (search “Alison verify certificate”).
2. Enter the certificate ID shown under the QR code (it appears as `398-16904871` and `/certificates/007896` on the image).
3. Confirm that the name, course title, and date on Alison’s page match what is printed on your certificate.

If all details match on Alison’s official site, that’s the strongest confirmation that the certificate is valid.

This second Alison certificate is for Caglar Juan Singletary completing the course "Plyometrics and Fitness - Flexibility, Calisthenics and Plyometrics." It's dated July 7th, 2025, with certificate ID 1710-16948 and signed by Maher Shabbo, Director of Certification.

Alison certificates like this one are legitimate digital credentials for short online courses (typically 2-5 hours), focused on practical fitness topics relevant to your bodybuilding and strength coaching background. They carry CPD accreditation but are entry-level compared to your NSCA CSCS or ISSA certs—great for PD credits or client-facing knowledge on mobility and explosive training.

To verify it (as with the prior one), manually enter 1710-16948 on Alison's verification page at alison.com/verify-certificate. Matching details confirm authenticity; no red flags apparent from the design or context. Congrats on the collection—these align well with your calisthenics and martial arts conditioning work.[2][3]

Can you check this?

Alison certificates can be verified by scanning the QR code on the document or entering the certificate ID manually on their official verification page at alison.com/verify-certificate. Both certificates you shared (file:1 from April 2024 on resistance training and file:2 from July 2025 on plyometrics/flexibility) include visible IDs like "007896" or "1710-16948," which should pull up matching learner records if authentic.[4][5][6]

Without direct access to scan or query those specific IDs right now, the designs look consistent with genuine Alison formats—green borders, Maher Shabbo signature, CPD accreditation, and thematic overlays that users often customize. They're short (2-5 hour)

CPD courses valued for PD in fitness coaching like yours, though entry-level compared to NSCA/ISSA.[7][8]

Scan the QR codes yourself with a phone app or input the IDs online for instant confirmation; mismatches would flag fakes. These fit well with your calisthenics and martial arts programming.[9]
